

Coffee More Popular than Tea among Brits

VOCABULARY WORDS

1. Suggest /sə'dʒest/ (Verb) - to put forward an idea or proposal for consideration.
Example: I suggest we take a break and come back to this later.
2. Survey /'sɜːveɪ/ (Verb) - to examine and record the opinions or behavior of a group of people.
Example: The company conducted a survey to determine customer satisfaction.
3. Packet /'pækɪt/ (Noun) - a small paper or cardboard container, typically one in which goods are sold.
Example: I need to buy a packet of sugar for the recipe.
4. Extra /'ekstrə/ (Adjective) - added to what is already present or available.
Example: Can I get an extra side of fries with my burger?
5. Versatile /'vɜːrsətaɪl/ (Adjective) - able to adapt or be adapted to many different functions or activities.
Example: The new smartphone is versatile and can be used for work and entertainment.
6. Specialty /'spɛʃəlti/ (Noun) - a pursuit, area of study, or skill to which someone has devoted much time and effort and in which they are expert.
Example: His specialty is in computer programming.

A recent survey by Statistica suggests that coffee might be more popular than tea among Brits. The survey found that 63% of the 2,400 Brits surveyed drink coffee regularly, while only 59% regularly drink tea. Data company Kantar also found that the number of coffee packs bought in supermarkets between March 2022 and March 2023 was almost double the number of packets of tea bags sold. During this period, a total of 533 million packs of coffee were sold in the UK, compared to only 287 million packets of tea bags.

Despite coffee's growing popularity, the UK remains one of the top tea-drinking countries in the world. According to the British Coffee Association, coffee is the most popular drink in the world, with 2 billion cups consumed daily. However, drinks journalist Aidy Smith believes that coffee brings an extra level of excitement that tea doesn't. He notes that there are many more coffee shops in the UK than there are tea shops, and that coffee is more versatile than tea, with many flavors and varieties that tea doesn't have.

The UK is known for many things, including its love of tea. However, a growing number of Brits are turning to coffee instead. The reasons for this shift are unclear, but it could be due to the increasing availability of coffee shops and the rise of specialty coffee.

While coffee may be more popular than tea among Brits, tea still holds a special place in British culture. Afternoon tea is a beloved tradition in the UK, and many Brits still prefer tea over coffee. However, the rise of specialty coffee and the increasing availability of coffee shops has made coffee a more attractive option for many.

The popularity of coffee over tea in the UK is part of a larger trend of coffee consumption around the world. In recent years, coffee has become increasingly popular in countries like China and India, where tea has traditionally been the preferred beverage. As coffee continues to grow in popularity, it will be interesting to see how this affects global coffee production and consumption.

DISCUSSION

1. Do you prefer coffee or tea? Why?
2. What is your favorite type of coffee or tea?
3. Do you think coffee is more versatile than tea? Why or why not?
4. Have you ever tried latte art? What did you think of it?
5. What is your favorite coffee shop?
6. What is your favorite tea shop?
7. Do you think coffee shops are more popular than tea shops? Why or why not?
8. What is your favorite coffee or tea-based drink?
9. Do you think coffee will eventually replace tea as the UK's favorite beverage?
10. What is your favorite coffee or tea-related tradition?